

In man's creative mind he envisions many journeys of pleasure, romance, and heroics, but more indelibly and more often are the challenging times embodied by the sea.

Throughout the life of mankind, men have always felt a closeness and challenging mania with the factor they have never conquered.

There can be no replacement for it's solace, contempt, and raging power, And there can be no greater reward than the existence she has granted to the many who have sailed on her fearless tossing belly.

Or the pleasure of living amongst her calm quiet presence when she rests as peaceful and gentle as a summers pond.

For it seems those visions created in our mind, Or enacted in our heart and soul and felt through our bones, As we ride upon the sea in all it's vastness and endless time.
