

UNDERWAY TRAINING

With Panama behind us, we were a long way from home, yet we still had 10,000 miles of ocean to cross before we would reach our destination. Our next port would be Hawaii, but that was still two weeks steaming away. The excitement of leaving Boston was gone; the canal transit, a new experience for most of us, was over. We soon settled down to a daily routine of preparation and training for the months ahead.

