

While we were anchored to buoy twenty-eight bravo, Mary Soo and her group of women side cleaners completely painted the entire ship, and using pieces of old rags instead of paint brushes. Her fee for this monumental job was a couple of hundred U. S. dollars, the rights to the soft drink concession on our fantail, and all our garbage.

The Navy Purchasing Branch located in the Royal Navy's China Fleet Club sold untold numbers of stereo sets, silk, perfumes, jewelry and suits of clothing to almost all INGHAM personnel. We thought there were a lot of gas stations in the United States until we saw the number of tailor shops in Hong Kong. The number of suits sold by Henry's Tailors is only equalled by the bottles of beer he gave to INGHAM's men.
