

SINGAPORE

The SPENCER ended her Asian "R&R" festivities in Singapore the same way she started them in Hong Kong over five months before—with a bang! Singapore was a highly sophisticated city, the perfect setting for a SPENCER blowout. Luxurious hotels, superb restaurants, and swinging nightclubs make it one of the prime tourist attractions in the Far East. The people of Singapore are of various nationalities, but all are friendly. Language is no problem, since everyone speaks excellent English. Singapore had much to offer the fun-seeking liberty hounds from the SPENCER.

Armed with plenty of folding green, a hoard of Coast Guardsmen descended upon the ultra-luxurious Malaysia Hotel and took up residence there for five momentous days, during which time several achieved a degree of local prominence. The second floor was "SPENCER territory" as raucous room parties spilled out into the hallways, and coasties could be seen wandering about everywhere soaking up the plush surroundings. The swimming pool was popular day and night.

The female population was at once attracted to the Coast Guard delegation of bachelors residing at the Malaysia, and so the spectacle was enhanced by the presence of some very attractive young ladies. Particularly popular with the sweet young things was Don "Ladies Man" Reeners. Another unnamed SPENCER reveler is alleged to have had not one, but two Malaysian misses vying for his affection. Rumor has it that these two girls, once 'good friends, almost came to blows over this heretofore unnamed Don Juan.
