

Our trip half way around the world and back, in which we covered over 50,000 miles, of course required extensive navigation, and we utilized every means available terrestrial, celestial, radar, and Loran. Ironic as it may seem, with all the electronic means available to us, the age-old method of celestial navigation proved the most dependable and most often used on our long journeys across the Pacific.

