

ON PATROL — BOARDING

Whoever first muttered "Semper Paratus" must have had an eye to the future when Junk Inspections would be included in the daily routine of Uncle Sam's white cutters. Segments of the vast South Vietnamese fishing fleets came under the careful scrutiny of YAKUTAT's boarding team at any hour, day or night and under the most desirable or most adverse weather conditions. Mindless of the risks involved, the boarders set out gamely whenever called and, more often than not, returned with unidentifiable varieties of fish or fruit and an occasional Vietnamese of questionable intentions. Accepting a bootlegged beer once in a while wasn't above board either, although that's more a matter for speculation than of record.
