

Hey, gang! The smoking lamp is out!

"Maybe if we try it right side up . . ."

DOUBLE DUTY

With the addition of 19 air conditioning units to the Engineers' worries, the comfort of the crew grew into a primary concern. The DGs were beleaguered with countless leaks in the system's "bargain" piping while Auxiliary personnel were kept busy repairing individual units which were almost human in their stubborn refusal to work. Obsolete machinery notwithstanding, the BTs performed unbelievably well in providing flushing pressure almost without fail, and in the meantime still found time to UNREP close to 150 PCFs.
